SUMMARY

Usually treated as a rather insignificant date, Union Day (the formation of the USSR--30 December) now gets considerable radio and press attention a large share of which is devoted to Russo-Ukrainian friendship. The Russian language is for the first time referred to as "a voluntarily selected medium" of communication among the several Soviet Republics, as a language capable of "enriching" the non-Russian dialects of the USSR. An opinion expressed in RADYANSKA UKRAINA in this connection is that the development of the Ukrainian language should follow a closer syntactical parallel to the Russian.

A decision of the Ukrainian Party's Central Committee on the state of the Republic points out among other things that the leading role of the Communist Party and the Great Russian people in the life of the country does not get the deserved attention in the Ukrainian press and lecture propaganda.

The points stressed in the output on Party activities are, a) the fight against corruption, euphemistically referred to as "truthfulness and honesty to the Party," b) intensified propagation of Stalin's article on the economic problems of Socialism and the 19th Party Congress documents and c) a higher level of political and ideological propaganda among the masses and within the Party.
